The contribution of young people in building a different future for the Catholic Church in Slovenia

Robin Schweiger

With the fall of the totalitarian regime, a transitional period opened up for the Catholic Church in Slovenia after years of being marginalized. While the Church has contributed to the reconciliation process and helped the foundation of the new state, at the same time it has been re-examining its mission and its (new) role within society. This paper presents the views of young Christians on how they see their Church and how they hope for a future of greater authenticity. The paper is based on results from the survey done for doctoral research among university students active in different groups within the Catholic Church.
